

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A foldable chair assembly includes a support frame, a first support leg, a second support, and two opposite resting members each pivotally mounted between the mediate portion of the first support leg and the mediate portion of the second support leg. Thus, the foldable chair assembly is folded and expanded easily and conveniently, thereby facilitating the user using the foldable chair assembly. In addition, when the foldable chair assembly is expanded, the limit rod is rested on the mediate portion of the second support leg, so that the first support leg is combined with the second support leg so as to support the support frame and the seat rigidly and stably.